

AMERICAN ANTHROPOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION (AAA)

CIRCULATION

109th Annual Meeting ~ November 17-21, 2010

Sheraton New Orleans and New Orleans Marriott Hotels

This theme is meant to encourage us to think about what happens when movement is the organizing trope of our questions, methodologies, analyses and accounts. We can think in terms of circulation across time as well as space, through different organizing principles, and in a variety of shapes and forms. The idea of circulation invites us to consider what triggers, facilitates, constrains, disrupts or stops flows; what is at stake in these processes, and for whom; and what their consequences might be for humans and for the environment. It opens up questions about what exactly circulates: signs, objects or bodies. Do different things circulate in different ways? Do they change or remain constant? What new phenomena, arrangements and inequalities does circulation produce? How are resources and ways of understanding them identified, made sense of, produced and distributed in the process? How and why do rates and types of circulation vary across time and space? What crystallizes and what continues to flow and reshape? "Circulation" also invites us to think across boundaries, whether those are boundaries organizing phenomena we seek to describe and explain, boundaries within and across disciplines, or boundaries among anthropologists or other social groups. It asks us to turn our attention to zones of encounter, conjunctions and liminal passages. It also requires us to ask whether "circulation" is a helpful trope for the production of anthropological knowledge. What light does it shed on the (increasingly widely circulating) concept of "culture"—arguably the central organizing construct of anthropology—and on anthropology itself?

AIDS AND ANTHROPOLOGY RESEARCH GROUP (AARG)

A MEMBERSHIP ORGANIZATION OF SCHOLARS, ACTIVISTS, AND PRACTITIONERS

Advocating the use of anthropological approaches in understanding HIV and AIDS since 1987

AARG has identified sixty-seven papers on HIV/AIDS; this includes twenty-nine papers where the entire panel focuses on HIV/AIDS and thirty-eight individual papers. Among the five panels, three are sponsored by the Society for Medical Anthropology, one by the Association of Africanist Anthropology, and one by the American Ethnological Society. Sponsorship of the thirty-eight individual papers is spread across eighteen different sections. More specifically, HIV/AIDS is importantly represented in panels sponsored by sections topically focused on: cultural anthropology; the practice of anthropology; religion; ethnology; linguistics; food/nutrition; children/childhood; feminist anthropology; queer anthropology; urban anthropology; medical anthropology; student anthropologists; and gender equity in anthropology as well as sections regionally focused on: East Asia; Latin America and the Caribbean; Africa; and North America. The depth and breadth of where HIV/AIDS-related papers fall within the AAA sponsorship system represents well both the realities of HIV/AIDS and the necessary diversity of interests among anthropologists involved in HIV/AIDS research and interventions. Beyond the sixty-seven papers included in the list that follows, there are hundreds of papers that might not focus on HIV/AIDS directly; however, the subject matter is contextually relevant.
