

Department: Anthropology

Position: Medical Anthropologist (Asseff Professorship in the Anthropology and History of Medicine)

Rank: Assistant Professor or Associate Professor

Description:

The Department of Anthropology in the College of Arts and Sciences at The Ohio State University invites applications for the Asseff Chair in the Anthropology and History of Medicine, commencing in autumn 2020. We seek a medical anthropologist but we will consider applications from scholars of related disciplines such as human/health geography, medical sociology, and women's and gender studies. In all cases, the ideal candidate's research and teaching will focus on infectious disease in living human populations with attention to the current and historical context. The successful candidate will enhance the Department of Anthropology's strengths in human health and ecology, past and present, by examining the biocultural dynamics/social determinants of infectious disease, such as how political economy shapes the distribution of infectious diseases and global health or individuals' experiences managing disease risk and treatment. While the home department will be Anthropology, the candidate will also be expected to enhance the Department of History's strengths in environmental history and the history of science, medicine and health. We are interested in scholars with active, field-based research, and expertise in ethnographic methods. In addition to playing a key role in the development of a new undergraduate major in medical anthropology, the successful candidate will teach a cross-listed class in the Department of History on the history of medicine or infectious disease. Finally, we seek a colleague who will initiate transformative, interdisciplinary research projects with colleagues across campus on issues related to infectious disease and human and environmental health.

This position is funded by The Dr. Carl F. Asseff Professorship Fund in the History of Medicine and the Infectious Disease Institute, one of Ohio State's Discovery Themes, a significant faculty hiring investment in key thematic areas in which the university can build on its culture of academic collaboration to make a global impact.

Qualifications:

Applicants must have a Ph.D. Demonstrated research productivity and excellence in teaching are required. The candidate will have the ability to offer a range of classes including introductory sociocultural and medical anthropology, the history of medicine/infectious disease, and specialized courses in their area of expertise that bring students of anthropology, history and related disciplines together.

Appointment is contingent on the university's verification of credentials and other information required by law and/or university policies, including but not limited to a criminal background check.
